I just discovered Ron's passing entirely by accident. While I hadn't seen Ron in decades, news of his death really struck me. Back when we were teens, we were in an active high school rock band called The Sixpence. Ron and his bandmate spent many, many hours together practicing and playing various jobs around our area of suburban Philadelphia, PA. While we all lost contact after high school, I often thought of Ron, where he was, and what he was doing. Rest in peace, Ron, and may Perpetual Light shine upon you.

I always loved when he would say "the trades baby, the trades" referring to real working men.
